

Angie Shin

Project Coordinator

Angie Shin is a Project Coordinator for the ADAPT Study, Turnaway Nepal study, and a number of other studies. She brings her passion for social justice and extensive UCSF related experience to the table having over 15 years of UC experience. Before working at ANSIRH, Angie served as Program Administrator for UCSF Department of Surgery Education Office, providing oversight to the education programs and administrative staff. Prior to that, she worked for UCSF General Clinical Research Center working directly under two Principal Investigators on various clinical studies.

Contact info: Angela.Shin@ucsf.edu, 510-986-8926

Research projects and studies

ADAPT Study: Attitudes and Decision-making After Pregnancy Testing. Nearly half of pregnancies in the United States are considered “unintended,” and at least half of these pregnancies are carried to term. Although accidental pregnancies are common, evidence about how women make decisions about their pregnancies and the health care they want and are able to obtain is surprisingly limited.